SHORT SYNOPSIS

3 GENERATIONS tells the stirring and touching story of three generations of a family living under one roof in New York as they deal with the life-changing transformation by one that ultimately affects them all. Ray (Elle Fanning) is a teenager who has struggled with the body assigned to him at birth and is determined to start transitioning. His single mother, Maggie (Naomi Watts), must track down Ray's biological father (Tate Donovan) to get his legal consent to allow Ray's transition. Dolly (Susan Sarandon), Ray's lesbian grandmother is having a hard time accepting that she now has a grandson. They must each confront their own identities and learn to embrace change and their strength as a family in order to ultimately find acceptance and understanding.

LONG SYNOPSIS

At 16 years-old, Ray (Elle Fanning) is already living as a boy at school and at home, where he lives with his single mother, Maggie (Naomi Watts), his grandmother Dolly (Susan Sarandon) and Dolly's longtime partner, Frances (Linda Emond). Dreading the prospect of another unhappy two years at his current school, Ray badly wants to begin hormone therapy so he can transfer to a new school and get a fresh start where people will only know him as a boy. Maggie is supportive and ready to do whatever Ray needs, as she has done his entire life. And while Dolly may be a liberal, larger-than-life bohemian, she is having a hard time accepting that she has a grandson.

Because of Ray's age, he cannot begin the physical transition process without the written consent of both biological parents. That means Maggie must track down her long-estranged ex-boyfriend, Craig (Tate Donovan), a necessary step that knocks her completely off-balance. Adding to the turmoil, Dolly and Frances reveal that they feel it's time for Maggie and Ray to live on their own. Feeling his future slipping away, Ray decides it's time to make something happen and takes matters into his own hands.

ABOUT THE PRODUCTION

Not long after the premiere of her third feature, Angels Crest, at the 2011 Tribeca Film Festival, Gaby Dellal began mulling an idea for a new film. First in New York and later at home in London, she came across a variety of people who were raising children in the context of the “modern family,” in which a parent, grandparent or child might be gay or transgender. Their stories about their experiences with their adolescent children got her thinking: what is it like to raise a teenager in a culture that is in the midst of a wave of change in attitudes about sex and gender, decades after the sexual revolution of the late 1960s and early 1970s?

Her questions ultimately led her to devise a story about three generations – lesbian grandmother, straight daughter, and teenager who was assigned female at birth but identifies as male – living under the same roof in New York City. “I was interested in three generations cohabitating in the same house with one of them knowing he’s a boy,” says Dellal. “I knew I wanted the grandmother to be in a happy long-term relationship, after having spent years in the closet because in her youth coming out wasn’t an option. In contrast, her teenage grandchild is already out as a transgender boy and wants to begin to physically transition. The grandmother can’t quite get her head around that idea, and in the middle you have a straight woman who is struggling to raise her transgender child as a single mother.”

She saw the potential for humor as well as drama in a story about a family confounded by a situation they never expected to confront. Gender reassignment would be a catalyst for the story, but not its sole focus. Explains Dellal: “I wanted to make an entertaining, accessible film about family dynamics and the trials and tribulations of raising a kid within a close family unit.”

She took her idea to producer Dorothy Berwin, who had produced Dellal’s BAFTA award-winning film On a Clear Day. Berwin had been out of the film business for a few years and wasn’t particularly looking to get back in. Dellal’s pitch changed her mind. “I loved the story immediately; it was so heartwarming, funny and intelligent. I said, ‘Okay I’m doing this,’” Berwin recalls. “Gaby’s concept felt very ‘now’ in dealing with a serious social issue, but it did so in a sophisticated, thoughtful way that I thought could be very accessible.”

Dellal and Berwin next set about commissioning a screenplay, seeking out different writers in New York and London. They wanted someone who could find the right tonal balance between comedy and drama, and they found what they were looking for in the work of Nikole Beckwith, a Brooklyn-based playwright who had been a member of The Public Theater’s Emerging Writers Group. Beckwith’s plays are fast-paced, dialogue-driven comedies about sad subjects: the death of a family member, abandonment, loss. “As far as theater, I write farces about your darkest fears. It’s how I process,” she laughs. “I like to take difficult feelings and difficult experiences and turn them into something positive that people can hopefully laugh at and laugh with. Everybody wants to recognize themselves in comedy. It’s a beautiful invitation into any story.”

Dellal and Beckwith began their discussions about the script and its central themes in the fall of 2012. As straight women writing about a family with a transgender child, they knew they had to do their research, consult and vet in order to tell a story that was authentic to the experiences of trans teens and their families. Their resources included individuals, organizations, documentary materials and, of course, the video blogs and other web materials created by and for the transgender community.

The fundamental goal was to write a story about what families look like now. That family includes Dolly and her longtime partner, Frances; Dolly's daughter, Maggie; and Maggie's trans child, who has shortened his given name of Ramona to Ray. "Every aspect of the family – having two moms, Maggie's single motherhood, Ray's struggle – that's our world today," Beckwith affirms. "I have LGBTQ friends and family, and I tried to do my best to also represent moments in their lives that I was privy to or a part of. The idea was to de-mystify a topic that's usually pushed toward a niche section of film by saying, here's one average American family. At its core, this story is about family, about identity, about love and acceptance. It's about all the questions that are central to any family, any group of people."

Beckwith wrote her first draft in the spring of 2013, and she and Dellal would confer via Skype for subsequent drafts, with Berwin weighing in. "We worked very closely together. I've never worked so intensively on a script, and it the most fun I've ever had on a project," the producer remarks. "The key was to find that balance between comedy, wit and drama. When you can go from one to the other, it makes it very accessible."

Producers Peter Saraf and Marc Turtletaub and their team at Big Beach were struck by the unique qualities of the screenplay, and took the project on. "We all loved the story, and loved what it had to say about a family in a particular set of circumstances," says Saraf. "There are these wonderful characters and with a great dynamic between them. Add to that the fact that it's a dramatic film that has room for humor, and you have the ingredients for a great movie."

He notes that by launching the narrative well after Ray has come out, the film gives the audience an emotional entry point to the story. "When the movie starts, a decision has already been made; a process has already occurred," Saraf comments. "We're entering the story at the moment in which one step needs to be taken. In the process of taking that step, the whole family is forced to confront their own issues, not just Ray. It allows the audience to come in and ask the question, what would I do? And that applies not only to a family with a transgender child, but to any family that has to deal with any kind of big issue: what would I do in this situation?"

The casting process moved with unusual speed, to Dellal's delight. "I've never really had a script where everybody's really enjoyed it and wanted to get on board so rapidly. But that's how it was with this one." Naomi Watts was the first actor to join the ensemble cast as Maggie, followed by Susan Sarandon as Dolly, Maggie's mother and Ray's grandmother; Elle Fanning as Ray; Linda Emond as Frances, Dolly's longtime partner; Tate Donovan as Craig, Maggie's estranged former boyfriend and Ray's father; and Sam Trammell as Craig's brother, Matthew.

Fanning found the script's approach as welcome as it was unexpected. "I was so happy that it's not a 'problem film' about being transgender. It's really about a family," she comments. "There's a funny, sweet scene after Ray gets in a fight. Ray lives in a house full of women and they've never had to deal with boy-type problems, so they have to learn how to adapt."

As a 16 year-old, Ray can't begin hormone therapy without the written consent of both parents. Fanning is the same age as her character, and could empathize with Ray. "It's already very difficult being a teenager, navigating through being young and finding out what you believe in and who you are. For Ray, there's an added layer because Ray was assigned female at birth, but knows he's a boy. And he's kind of fed up with everyone and feels it's time that something changed so that he can move along with this process."

Fanning took her responsibility to the character very seriously and did her research. "When you're doing a role like this you want to get it right, because it's a whole community," she acknowledges. "Gaby and I sat down and consulted with a lot of trans kids. We asked them, 'What was it like the first time you came out as being transgender? Do your parents accept it?' And they were so open with us. Adults will say to teenagers, 'You're so young. You're just a teenager. You don't know what you want. How can you make that decision?' But these kids know who they are."

Ray has no doubts about how he feels and what he wants. His mother, Maggie, however, is by no means as certain. As Watts puts it, "Maggie has focused all her energy on raising her child and has hidden from her own life in the process. She's smart and strong, but there's a sense that the challenge that lies before her is bigger than any she's faced before. She's made her decision and is on the warpath to help her child achieve the peace and happiness he rightfully deserves." Maggie also struggles to keep her mother from undercutting her parental authority. Ray is a bit in awe of his grandmother, Dolly, who has managed the careers of numerous jazz musicians and welcomed more than a few legends into her home. As played by Sarandon, the chic and sophisticated Dolly is very much the alpha member of the family. As the actress puts it, "Dolly heads the household in a very outspoken, sometimes indelicate way. She is creative, questioning, loving and narcissistic."

Ray doesn't expect his grandmother's opposition to his transition, figuring she'd be a natural ally as a politically liberal gay woman. But as Sarandon notes, "Being gay doesn't guarantee that you are on board with transitioning to another gender. Being gay is about sexual orientation and being transgender is about identity. I think Dolly speaks for all those who fear the hormone treatments and medical aspects of young people transitioning."

Dolly's partner, Frances, has no reservations about Ray's decision but chooses to remove herself from the discussion. To Emond, this speaks to Frances' role in the family. "With any family, people find their position that is helpful to make that dynamic work and go forward," she reflects. "It's clear there's a lot of love in that house and a lot of support for each other in that house. I think because Frances is just one step outside the biological line, it allows her to have some objectivity. I feel like she's a bit of a rudder in the family. She'll stay the course, and nudge people if and when necessary."

Ray's determination to secure hormone treatments sets in motion a long-avoided reckoning between Maggie, her former boyfriend, Craig, and Craig's brother, Matthew. Donovan first heard about the movie over dinner at Dellal's home in London; the two have known each since college. They talked about it again a few months later when Dellal came to New York, but Donovan wasn't aware there might be a part for him. Then he got a call to read for a part in a new film directed by...Gaby Dellal.

After a long estrangement, Craig's first encounter with Maggie doesn't exactly go well. "Craig is completely blind-sided when Maggie shows up. He's sort of forgotten about that family, and is living in a comfortable suburban bubble. And from his point of view, that bubble is rudely burst," Donovan comments. "Some people might consider Craig a 'bad dad.' But I empathized with him completely. He went through a real trauma in his relationship with Maggie and wasn't treated well."

Donovan researched transgender youths and hunted down interviews with kids and their parents. A radio documentary about transgender teens and their families was particularly enlightening. "One parent was saying, 'I was against the whole idea. I mean, who wants to sign off on having their child, at a very young age, changing their gender? But if your kid is suicidal, and deeply, deeply unhappy with the way they were born, then what are you going to do? You've got to save your child.' That's the thought process that Craig experiences. He goes from thinking Ray is too young to be making decisions about himself to accepting it. And Elle's performance really helped me make that transition. She just connected to that feeling of 'I'm doing to die if this doesn't happen.' It was really powerful."

Throughout the development of the project, Dellal had also been in touch with numerous trans teens and their families. As they prepared for production, the filmmakers consulted with GLAAD and The Center in New York City. To prepare the film's team, an advisor from GLAAD spoke to the cast and crew about the experience of being trans, what it means to be transgender, and how it is distinguished from sexual orientation. Explains Saraf, "We tried to get input from as many different people as possible as to what we were getting right, what felt authentic, what we might change and what didn't feel real to the experience of trans kids. You don't want to simplify or whitewash it, but you want to make sure you're being as realistic and authentic as possible."

3 GENERATIONS filmed for 25 days from November-December 2014, in New York City and Westchester County.

The film's primary location is a multi-story 19th century house on Stuyvesant Street in New York's East Village. A steep staircase is the only means of access to the various floors. Curiously, there are two kitchens, one of them on the top floor – this became Maggie's kitchen. Dolly and Frances occupy the first two floors, while Maggie and Ray live on the top floors, which were made to look more dilapidated than the lower floor. Says Dellal, “I was very keen to have a situation where the house is very narrow and cramped. This house felt not too big, not too grand and there was a certain amount of dishevelment, which was good. The central staircase is a nice metaphor for Maggie’s life. She climbs these endless stairs to the top of the house where she hides.”

The production crew emptied out the home and brought in the furniture, artwork and other pieces of décor. The state of the rooms depended on which characters occupied the space. Explains production designer Stephanie Carroll, “Dolly and Frances’ space is all freshly painted; it’s minimally furnished because Dolly is a very tasteful person, and the art reflects her life in the jazz world and her interests. As you climb the stairs, the house gets a little more decrepit. Gaby and I wanted it to look run down – Maggie never planned on living here her whole life, so she hadn’t put a lot of time into it.”

Costume designer Arjun Bhasin was able to envision the characters’ wardrobes just from reading the screenplay. “The characters were so fully fleshed out, so real, that it didn’t call for much design beyond what was on the page,” he recalls. “Maggie’s wardrobe is indicative of her state of mind, so she’s always kind of messy and thrown together. Dolly is very much the grande dame so she’s got very chic, almost vintage look.

Throughout the film, Ray skateboards around the city, and Fanning’s wardrobe reflects not only Ray’s male identity but his allegiance to skater culture. Says Bhasin: “Ray wants to be a boy and be just like everybody else. He wears oversize men’s trousers, oversized baggy shirts, sweaters, flannel shirts, and the same yellow boots every day. It’s a very contemporary, street, East Village schoolboy look.”

On set, collaboration was welcome, says Emond. “We all were given great freedom to pipe in, as is the case in any good creative environment, so that you make the piece better and truer and move it forward. One rainy night, all five of us women, including Gaby, were in the car at a gas station in Pleasantville, New York, after shooting too many hours. We needed to film the scene, but there were certain things that we all had questions about. For maybe five or ten minutes you’re in grumpy-land and suddenly you come through the other side and the scene is a lot better. And everything is better. It was just a great experience.”

A lot has changed in the world since Dellal had her first thoughts about a film about a family with a transgender teenager. In fact, quite a bit has changed since the film wrapped in December: the U.S. military announced that it will consider allowing transgender people to serve openly; The New York Times launched a dedicated op-ed section covering transgender issues; Caitlyn Jenner captured the world’s attention and won admirers with her transition to female; a transgender man became the leading contender to be the cover subject of Men’s Health magazine’s annual Ultimate Guy contest; and “Transparent” won the Golden Globe® for Best TV Series. As Saraf notes, “What was unimaginable in terms of the global conversation happening around transgender issues, even eight or nine months ago, is now very much in discussion. It's fascinating and wonderful, and it allows this movie to enter into a very dynamic conversation, which is exciting."

His thoughts are echoed by Sarandon, who has a long history as an activist, and was an early ally of the gay community as it confronted AIDS in the 1980s. She expects that people may recognize their own thoughts and feelings when Dolly expresses dismay and bafflement over Ray's choice to transition. "When Dolly speaks her objections, she gives voice to those watching who have those reservations. But when Dolly comes around to the realization that the person she loves is not changing, only the 'details,' that's important. We are more than gender, age or color."

Dellal hopes audiences will recognize something of their own lives in the story of this modern family. "Every family faces challenges in raising children. This family unit is working to understand gender identity, but for other families it can be something totally different. I'd love people to feel that the emotion and intimacy of this family is relevant to their own set of circumstances. I hope people leave the cinema feeling grateful for their family."

ABOUT THE CAST

Naomi Watts (Maggie)

Two-time Academy Award nominee Naomi Watts has garnered several impressive accolades throughout her career. Her first Academy Award® nomination for Best Actress was for her performance in Alejandro Gonzalez Iñárritu's "21 Grams" where she starred alongside Sean Penn and Benicio Del Toro. Her performance also garnered Best Actress Awards nominations from the SAG Awards®, BAFTAs, Broadcast Film Critics and Golden Satellites as well as Best Actress honors from multiple critics' associations. At the film's premiere at the 2003 Venice International Film Festival, she received the Audience Award (Lion of the Public) for Best Actress. The film itself won the Special Distinction Award at the Independent Spirit Awards. She also earned an Academy Award® nomination for Best Actress for her role in Juan Antonio Bayona's "The Impossible," starring alongside Ewan McGregor. For her role as a courageous wife and mother struggling to survive the aftermath of a tsunami, she also earned Best Actress nominations from the HFPA for a Golden Globe Award, from the SAG Awards®, the Broadcast Film Critics and she received the Desert Palm Achievement Actress Award at the Palm Springs International Film Festival. Watts also earned a SAG Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in "St. Vincent," which she starred alongside Bill Murray. She also starred in Iñárritu's "Birdman" with Emma Stone and Michael Keaton. Among its many accolades, the film won the Academy Award for Best Motion Picture as well as several other categories and also racked up an impressive number of nominations.

Watts will be seen in several projects this year including "3 Generations" with Elle Fanning, the boxing drama "Chuck" with Liev Schreiber and Elisabeth Moss, which premiered at the 2016 Venice Film Festival and will screen at the Tribeca Film Festival, David Lynch's highly anticipated "Twin Peaks" reboot, Colin Trevorrow's "The Book of Henry", and Netflix's "Gypsy". She also shot "The Glass Castle" with Brie Larson and Woody Harrelson.

She also starred in the psychological thriller "Shut In" as well as "Demolition" with Jake Gyllenhaal, which premiered at the 2015 Toronto International Film Festival, and "Gus Van Sant's "Sea Of Trees" with Matthew McConaughey, which premiered at the 2015 Cannes Film Festival. Her other recent films include The Weinstein Company's "About Ray" with Susan Sarandon and Elle Fanning, which also premiered at the 2015 Toronto International Film Festival, Noah Baumbach's "While We're Young" with Ben Stiller and Amanda Seyfried, and two of the installments in the "Divergent" franchise based on the popular best-selling novels written by Veronica Roth.

Watts has had an impressive list of movies since her acclaimed turn in David Lynch's controversial drama "Mulholland Drive," for which she earned Best Actress Awards from a number of critics' organizations, including the National Board of Review and National Society of Film Critics. In addition to starring in Peter Jackson's epic remake of "King Kong," her credits include Clint Eastwood's critically acclaimed "J. Edgar," starring opposite Leonardo DiCaprio; Doug Liman's "Fair Game," starring opposite Sean Penn; Woody Allen's "You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger," as part of an all-star cast, including Josh Brolin, Anthony Hopkins, and Antonio

Banderas; Rodrigo Garcia's "Mother and Child," for which she received an Independent Spirit Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress; Tom Twyker's "The International" with Clive Owen; "We Don't Live Here Anymore," which she starred in and produced; "The Assassination of Richard Nixon," opposite Sean Penn and Don Cheadle; David O. Russell's "I (Heart) Huckabee's," with Jude Law and Dustin Hoffman; Gore Verbinski's "The Ring" and its sequel, "The Ring 2"; Merchant-Ivory's "Le Divorce," with Kate Hudson, Glenn Close and Stockard Channing; John Curran's "The Painted Veil," opposite Edward Norton, which was based on W. Somerset Maugham's novel; David Cronenberg's drama/thriller "Eastern Promises," opposite Viggo Mortensen; and Michael Haneke's thriller "Funny Games."

Born in England, Watts moved to Australia at the age of 14 and began studying acting. Her first major film role came in John Duigan's "Flirting." She produced and starred in the short film "Ellie Parker," which screened in competition at the 2001 Sundance Film Festival. In 2005, a full length feature of the short debuted at Sundance.

Among her many awards and recognitions, Watts received the Montecito Award from the Santa Barbara Film Festival in 2006 for her role in "King Kong"; was honored by the Palm Springs Film Festival in 2003 for "21 Grams"; and in 2002, was named the Female Star of Tomorrow at ShoWest and received the Breakthrough Acting Award at the Hollywood Film Festival, both for her work in "Mulholland Drive." She was also honored for her entire body of work at the 2011 Deauville Film Festival. She is also one of the faces of L'Oreal. Watts resides in Los Angeles and New York.

ABOUT THE FILMMAKERS

Gaby Dellal (Co-Writer/Director/Producer)

British born Gaby Dellal's 2005 feature film On a Clear Day opened Sundance and was bought by Focus Features. It stars Peter Mullan and Brenda Blethyn and received Scottish BAFTA for best film/director, and Locarno Film Festival's Piazza Grande, along with several other awards. This was followed up by the feature film Angels Crest with Jeremy Piven and Elizabeth McGovern. Dellal made her feature directing debut with The Ride (2003).

Previously, her short Football was at Sundance starring Helena Bonham Carter. Her other short films attracted actresses like Joely Richardson, Rachel Weisz and Leslie Manville, amongst others. She gave 13-year-old Max Minghella his debut film role in her short Toyboys.

2012 saw her much acclaimed 3-part TV drama for ITV called "Leaving" starring Helen McCrory.

She was associate director of Ibsens' "Ghosts" at the Almeida Theatre London. This transferred to the West End, with Lesley Manville and is coming to BAM in 2015.

Nikole Beckwith (Co-Writer)

Nikole Beckwith is from Newburyport, Massachusetts. Her plays have been developed and performed around the world with the likes of The Public Theater, Playwrights Horizons, Clubbed Thumb, Colt Couer, The National Theatre of London and The Royal Court among others. Her debut feature Stockholm, Pennsylvania (2012 Nicholl Fellowship, 2012 Black List, 2013 Sundance Screenwriters Lab) premiered at the 2015 Sundance Film Festival in the US Dramatic Competition; it premiered on Lifetime in May, and received three Critics Choice nominations, including Best Movie. She is currently one of the inaugural San Francisco Film Society Female Film Fellows and is in development on her first original series. Also a pen and ink artist, Beckwith's comics have been featured on NPR, WNYC, the Huffington Post, The Hairpin and her own nikolebeckwith.com. She lives in Brooklyn.

Dorothy Berwin (Producer)

Dorothy Berwin is an award-winning independent film producer and a champion of talent in the theater and visual arts. Born in London and based in New York, she began her career as an entertainment lawyer before becoming a director of Zenith, one of the UK's leading TV and film production companies, where she worked with the directors Todd Haynes, Hal Hartley and Robert Altman.

She founded InFilm Productions in 1995. She executive produced the 2015 film Carol, directed by Todd Haynes and starring Cate Blanchett and Rooney Mara. She is most recently an executive producer of the new documentary by Laura Poitras, The Art of Dissent, for the New York Times and the New Museum.

Other films include Gaby Dellal's On a Clear Day, which opened the Sundance Film Festival. On a Clear Day went on to win the Scottish BAFTA Award for Best Film and received nominations for Scottish BAFTA Best Director and BIFA Best New Director awards. Berwin also produced The Safety of Objects, directed by Rose Troche and starring Glenn Close, Patricia Clarkson, Dermot Mulroney and Kristen Stewart in her first film role.

Berwin is co-founder and trustee of Berwin Lee London New York Playwrights, Inc., a non-profit organization fostering the art of playwriting on both sides of the Atlantic. She joined the Lincoln Center Theater Board in 2011 and the North American Acquisitions Committee of Tate in 2013. She is also an ambassador at large for the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual & Transgender Community Center in New York.

Marc Turtletaub (Producer)

Marc Turtletaub has been a producer for fourteen years, through two production companies. In 2004, he co-founded Big Beach with Peter Saraf and has served as a producer on all of the company's films, including the Academy Award-winning Little Miss Sunshine, directed by Jonathan Dayton and Valerie Faris.

Turtletaub's other credits with Big Beach include the documentary Lucky, directed by Jeffrey Blitz; Phillip Seymour Hoffman's directorial debut, Jack Goes Boating; Sam Mendes' Away We Go; Christine Jeffs' Sunshine Cleaning; John Crowley's Is Anybody There?; Ramin Bahrani's Chop Shop; and Liev Schrieber's Everything Is Illuminated. Big Beach's most recent releases are, Jesse Peretz's Our Idiot Brother, Collin Trevorrow's Safety Not Guaranteed, and Jordan Vogt-Roberts' The Kings of Summer. Prior to founding Big Beach, Turtletaub created Deep River Productions in 2000 with David Friendly.

Peter Saraf (Producer)

Peter Saraf's producing credits include The Kings of Summer; Safety Not Guaranteed; Our Idiot Brother; Jack Goes Boating; Sunshine Cleaning; Away We Go; Is Anybody There?; Little Miss Sunshine; Everything is Illuminated; The Truth About Charlie; Adaptation; Ulee's Gold; and the feature documentaries Mandela and The Agronomist.

He has been nominated for Academy and Golden Globe Awards and has won multiple awards including the Spirit, Gotham, and PGA Awards. He is the co-founder of Big Beach, a New York-based independent film production and financing company. Saraf is Chair of the Producers Guild of America East.

David Johnson (Director of Photography)

David Johnson started his career in cinematography in 1974 at Panavision London. He worked on notable movies such as Chariots of Fire and Ridley Scott's Alien and worked with Ray Harryhausen on the original Clash of the Titans. His 1994 debut as director of photography was Othello, starring Laurence Fishburne and Kenneth Brannagh. Since then he has photographed numerous movies in an abundance of different styles, from blockbusters like Alien vs. Predator to more artful films such as Hilary and Jackie. Johnson began collaborating with Gaby Dellal in 1998 when she began her directing career. 3 Generations is his first U.S. feature production.

Joe Landauer (Editor)

Joe Landauer most recently edited Max Landis's Me Him Her; Colin Trevorrow's Safety Not Guaranteed; which was nominated for the Grand Jury Prize at the 2012 Sundance Film Festival; Max Winkler's Ceremony, which premiered at the 2010 Toronto International Film Festival; and Jennifer Westfeldt's Friends With Kids.

Born in Oakland, CA, Landauer moved to New York in 1996. He started his career working as an assistant editor on features such as James Mangold's Cop Land, Jim Sheridan's The Boxer, and M. Night Shyamalan's Signs as well as the Visual Effects Editor on Jonathan Demme's The Manchurian Candidate.

Landauer's other credits as film editor include Laurie Collyer's Sherrybaby, Mary Stuart Masterson's The Cake Eaters and Mitchell Lichtenstein's Teeth. Mr. Landauer teamed up again with Mitchell Lichtenstein for his film Happy Tears and was Co-Editor with Carol Littleton on Jonathan Demme's Bob Marley documentary, Marley.

Stephanie Carroll (Production Designer)

Stephanie Carroll, Production Designer, has designed over 15 films. Her most recent include Mira Nair's Queen of Katwe (Disney), which was filmed in Uganda and Meg Ryan's directorial debut Ithaca (Playtone).

Her design career began with Nair's Monsoon Wedding, which won the Silver Lion Award at the Venice Film Festival, and the Emmy award winning "Hysterical Blindness", which was produced for HBO Films. Aside from her long collaboration with Nair, her other films include The Namesake and Amelia.

Carroll has designed for directors such as Michael Radford, Adam Brooks and Tom Dicillo, who is an Indie Award winning director for Living in Oblivion. She has also collaborated repeatedly with acclaimed DP's such as Fred Elmes, Stuart Dryburgh, Declan Quinn, as well as Andrew Dunn and Sean Bobbitt.

She began her career as a set decorator for Ang Lee on The Ice Storm and Ride With The Devil, Garry Marshall on Runaway Bride, Milcho Manchevski on Dust, and Abel Ferrara on "The Bad Lieutenant."

Based in New York City, she has filmed in India, South Africa, Macedonia, England and Uganda.

Arjun Bhasin (Costume Designer)

Arjun Bhasin was born in India and studied film at New York University's Tisch school of Arts.

Shuttling effortlessly between Hollywood and Bollywood, crisscrossing sensibilities and ideologies, Arjun brings a unique vision to his films.

Among his film credits are collaborations with director Ang Lee on Life of Pi, Mira Nair on Monsoon Wedding, The Namesake, and The Reluctant Fundamentalist, John Carney on Begin Again and Ira Sachs on Love Is Strange.

Michael Brook (Music)

Michael Brook is an award-winning film composer, musician, record producer and inventor. He has scored the soundtracks to over 40 films including Davis Guggenheim's An Inconvenient Truth, David O. Russell's The Fighter, and Sean Penn's Into the Wild, which earned Brook a Golden Globe nomination for best film score. He is recognized for a unique compositional style that incorporates elements of Americana, electronic, ambient, world music and symphonic music. His soundtracks typically feature unusual combinations of instruments, sounds and moods that create a powerful emotional impact. His music career began as a recording artist, guitar player, producer and collaborator, working with artists such as Brian Eno, David Sylvian, Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, Youssour N'Dour, The Pogues, and Jane Siberry for ground-breaking labels such as 4AD and Real World Records. As his music began to be licensed in films such as Heat and Any Given Sunday, he pursued a life-long interest in composing for film and moved to Los Angeles from London in 1999. His newest film, John Crowley's Brooklyn debuted earlier this year at Sundance and will be released in late 2015.
